You could always find "her babies" running around the house along with her four-legged companion Fuzzy. She was a great cook and always had something cooking on the stove. She was a very creative artist, and painted beautiful pictures and landscapes. In her spare time she worked as a beautician in her home. Several years later, she met and married Jessie T. Calhoun, who proceeded her in death.

During the later years of her life, Bea's eyesight had begun to fail, and it was difficult for her to venture out. She loved to the watch her basketball and football games on TV and called family and friends on the telephone. Addie Lee Calhoun is survived by: sister; Desiree Crowder; brothers, Johnny B.
