“ You were one of my Daughter’s favorite teachers and we were neighbors. You always said that she would say to the students the things that you couldn’t. Just a wonderful woman, when you get to heaven hug our baby DaMesha.

“ Today, I honor and celebrate the life of a remarkable educator, mentor, and my godmother, Mrs. Carol Jackson-Walton. For decades, you encouraged me to become the best woman I could be. Mrs. Walton, you poured wisdom, patience, and love into every student you taught, shaping minds and inspiring hearts. Your legacy extends far beyond the classroom walls. You instilled knowledge, dignity, and perseverance in all who had the privilege to learn from you. Your presence was a beacon of strength, your words a source of encouragement, and your lessons a foundation for generations to come.

With a firm voice and commanding presence, Mrs. Walton, you always reminded us that excellence was expected, discipline was necessary, and respect was non-negotiable. You pushed us not just to be good students, but to be good people.

*You were the epitome of what every African American child needed in a teacher. I thank you for your dedication, grace, and the lasting impact you've left on this world. Mrs. Walton, you marched alongside Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., stood on the front lines in the fight for Civil Rights, and your powerful story was seen in Eyes on the Prize. You didn't just teach us history, you lived it, shaping the world with your courage and determination.*

While in college, I would visit your classroom, eager to learn from your brilliance, observing your methods and strategies. As I stepped into my own role as an educator, you continued to pour into me, coming to my classroom to teach my students about Black history, not just as lessons from the past, but as a legacy to carry forward.

As my godmother, you gave me love beyond measure, offering guidance, encouragement, and a devoted presence in this life's journey. Mrs. Walton, you were warm and nurturing, but make no mistake, when we did wrong, you let us know it! You never corrected us out of anger, but out of love. Outings and overnight stays with you were full of fun, laughter, and cherished memories that will stay with me forever.

Mrs. Walton, thank you for loving me and so many others unconditionally. Rest in peace, teacher and godmother. I will love you forever and always. Your goddaughter, LaShaunda.
