Auntie it's been a year and it still feels like yesterday. I've let go and tried let God fix it. But I can't help but see you where I go.

I guess it's been a minute since something like this has happened in the family. But truth be told, why you, why so sudden. Maybe it wasn't sudden, maybe it was something you and God talked about, maybe it was something not sudden but destined in his time. Who really knew what you were going through? Not really anyone but you. I get it, life can seem so ghetto for a spirit meant to sore. Did we not hold you long enough, did we not kiss you long enough, did we not make note of that beautiful smile that could light up the room from afar, or was it not enough to hear your side? But I beg to differ maybe oh just maybe it was the Lord's will, and certainly his will be done. And I must let it be so, and let his will be done. But forever, FOREVER IN MY HEART OF MEMORIES YOU'LL BE!! Memories of laughter, memories of love, memories of honesty, memories of transparency, and memories indeed you left behind that will be cherished. I love you auntie and I know you love me too 💕
