Howard - August 12, 2025 at 06:07 PM

I carry so many fond memories of my cousin Greg. He truly was the best cousin a girl could ask for. Some of my favorite moments were during our time at the University of Michigan. Every now and then, I'd run into him in the halls or find him tucked away in one of the lounges. We'd sit and catch up, and no matter how short the conversation, I always walked away feeling grounded and uplifted.

Greg had this rare combination of brilliance and humility. He was one of the smartest people I knew, yet also one of the most down-to-earth. What I admired most was his calm presence. He never rushed his words, never spoke without thought. Every conversation felt intentional, like he had taken the time to weigh his words with care. In that way, he reminded me so much of my dad.

One of Greg's favorite stories to tell was from when I was a baby. He loved to recall the night my parents went on a date and he got to babysit me. Every time he brought it up as I got older, I couldn't help but laugh and wonder... what could I possibly have done as a baby to leave such a lasting impression on him? Greg was nearly ten years older than me, so I can only imagine the kind of handful I must have been.

But that was Greg, he found joy in the simplest, most ordinary moments and turned them into cherished memories. To me, that's who he was, someone who noticed, who remembered, and who made you feel special simply by being present.
