“ Papa Shumpert rest well from your labor. You have been a blessing to me, your beloved City of Flint, your family and many others. THANK YOU! Below is a tribute to a small piece of your work...

Always understanding and believing in the importance of working for oneself, Michael Joseph Shumpert used his knowledge, experiences he gained, combined with lessons learned from working with Vernon Merritt, Jr., the founder of Flint's first black-owned FM radio station (WDZZ), and set his sights on being the next. One of the first and most difficult hurdles in accomplishing that goal was the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). Since the beginning, the FCC had been suspected of unfairly withholding licenses from minorities. There are approximately 15,330 radio stations in the United States and an estimated 68 are owned by African Americans. With determination, faith and unyielding fortitude, Michael became one of them. In 1989, WOVE (98.9 JAMZ) aired featuring an Urban Contemporary format targeting the Flint and Saginaw markets. Not simply satisfied with providing good music, he sought to educate, enlighten and entertain his listeners by offering a blend of American musical art form with special features such as "Politics, Religion & Everyday Living." In 2009, Michael was 1 of 15 graduates of the Broadcast Leadership Training (BLT) program in Washington DC. Established by the National Association of Broadcasters Education Foundation (NABEF) in 2001, the program is designed for senior level broadcast radio and television managers seeking to advance as group executives or station owners. At the time of his passing, Michael is and was the only African American owned and operated independent radio station in the Flint/Saginaw metro area serving a great musical tradition spanning almost 30 years targeting the 25-54 year old listener. His station's call sign meaning is..."With Opportunity We Empower," and he did just that. It was his desire that the community would seize opportunities presented, make opportunities where none existed...to be Better, to be Stronger, and to be Empowered.
