“ Too many memories to count, but I know where to begin. I was 12-years-old. He was Camille's (my new found best friend) dad who drove a black Cadillac and wore stylish hats. I was introduced to him as Monica, but it was usually Sister Soul followed with a smile and one of his many greetings/original sayings that made anyone around chuckle. Any given day, an Ojays song would be flowing out of the speakers and Camille would be snapping her fingers joining in on the hook unless she was teasing him with her own funny jokes or interrogating him about if or what he ate. Over the years of our adolescents and early adulthood, I grew to see more and more how his fatherly presence was shared amongst so many young people like me in a way that was so humbling because he and Mrs. Brown were so accepting of all of us kids. Together they were home away from home as well as home if you didn't have a place to call one. They didn't just treat you like a neighbor, they would embrace us into their fold as if we were their own with know judgements, responsible advice, food hot off the stove or the grill, and some of the best kool-aid ever. I thank God for the day and the many years that followed me meeting Camille because through our friendship/sisterhood I gained an extended family and neighborhood that kept me together when a so many things were falling apart at various times throughout my younger years. I love The Brown Family and Mr. Brown will truly be missed by so many. To Mama Brown, Camille and Shawn... Thank you for sharing his cool, his love and his laughter and his kindness with us kids from Flint. Never to be forgotten. 🥹🙏💜
